FALL 2016 Watershed Masters Training

*Education to action...
Explore the natural wonders!*

Sponsored by:
Skagit Conservation District
in partnership with the City of Burlington,
City of Anacortes,
City of Mount Vernon,
City of Sedro-Woolley, and Skagit County

Explore the wonders of local watersheds in a fun and relaxed atmosphere!

What do Watershed Masters do?

- Receive 40 hours of FREE training, which covers an introduction to local geology, historical and treasured places, marine life and biology, the values and functions of estuaries, the biology and habitat needs of local salmon, stream ecology, soils and wetlands, nonpoint source pollution, stormwater runoff, Low Impact Development, forestry practices, agriculture, shellfish, water quality, and MORE!
- Hear from MANY LOCAL EXPERTS on a variety of topics and issues.
- Become familiar with the complexity and dilemmas involved in managing our natural resources.
- Participate in local field trips.
- Receive a FREE comprehensive reference notebook.
- Meet new friends and participate in meaningful community projects!
- After completing the training, participants return 40 hours of volunteer service, undertaking projects designed to protect and/or enhance water quality, or to educate the public on these same issues (usually within 2 years of completing the course).

The Watershed Masters Volunteer training program is now entering its 24th session and is supported by over twenty local natural resource agencies and organizations. The program is intended for community residents (age 17 and up) who are aspiring to increase their knowledge about local watersheds, water quality, and stream ecology (no previous experience required). Participants attend 8 FUN and INFORMATIVE evening sessions (held weekly), and 3 Saturday field excursions.
